The Cave and It

I, Lauren—an 8-year-old who’s always excited to explore—once saw a cave near the zoo. It looked mysterious and cool, and I really wanted to go in. So, I asked my mom if I could explore it.

Of course, she said, “No.”

But I couldn’t stop thinking about it. So, I came up with a plan to sneak out at night with my best friends—Stacy and Lisa. We agreed to meet at our secret meet-up spot at 1 AM. We all snuck out of our houses quietly and rode our bikes to the zoo.

When we got there, we didn’t just see the cave... We saw the most beautiful carnival ever—lights, colors, music. It looked magical. We were so excited, we completely forgot to be scared and ran right in.

Eventually, we made our way into the cave. As we stepped inside, we saw strange, weird-looking "paintings" on the walls—shapes and faces that didn’t make sense. We took some photos, giggling and whispering, but as we went deeper into the cave, things started to change. We began to feel chills. The air got colder. The fun turned to fear.

That’s when I decided to start recording.

We were walking and talking nervously when I heard something—a faint, chilling voice. It sounded like ‘It’ was calling for help. My instincts told me to stay put, but my heart told me to help.

I followed my heart.

I ran ahead into the darkness, following the sound, until suddenly—I stopped. In front of me stood a 10-foot-tall black figure. Before I could react... I blacked out.

The next thing I remember, I was in a hospital bed. My mom and friends were by my side, crying and smiling at the same time.

“You’re awake?!” my mom said, hugging me tight. “We were so worried! We thought we lost you. The doctors said to wave goodbye to you for the last time!”

I was confused, until my friends explained everything.

Apparently, I had been in a coma for six whole months. The doctors had nearly given up hope. I was about to die.

But then... I remembered something.

While I was unconscious, I saw It again. It wasn’t scary anymore. It was smiling. That smile... it told me everything. It wasn’t evil. It wasn’t trying to hurt me. It was just lonely. It didn’t have friends and didn’t mean to scare me.

I believe It saved me... and in doing so, maybe It gave up its own life.

Years passed, but I never forgot that figure. I always wondered what It's name was... who It really was.

Then, on my 21st birthday, I stepped outside to get some fresh air, and I saw It again. My heart jumped—I was excited and nostalgic at the same time.

I ran toward It and asked, “How are you? Are you okay? Why did you save me?”

It looked at me and simply said,

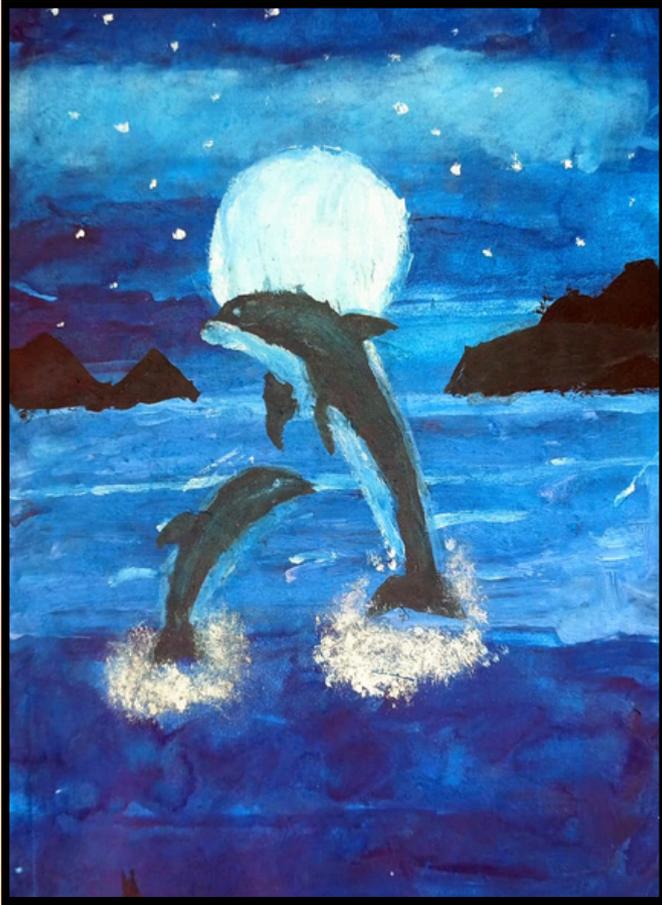

“Yes, I saved you. I don’t have friends. Everyone is scared of me. And today... I’m going to God. They’ll decide my fate. I just came to say goodbye.”

Then, It smiled one last time—and disappeared into thin air.

I stood there quietly, said goodbye, and accepted reality.
